Dear Parents,

With schools still shut down due to the coronavirus lockdown, self-study is the norm now more than ever. Self-study simply means studying by yourself but it is not an easy task since we all need assistance in some form. Not to forget that self-study also requires discipline and organization.

Here are a few tips to help our students with self-study:

1. A study plan can be created around the topics that need to be covered and assign time according to your understanding of the topic.
2. It is important to take notes while you study. Do remember that note-taking does not mean that you copy down every word given in the book. Stick to the main points, and summarize what you study in your own words. Make sure that you also note down the meaning of difficult words and important definitions.
3. Our video lectures are similar to attending lectures in a classroom although from the comfort of your home. You also have the option to choose from multiple topics. There are videos for each subject which are very creative and interesting.
4. Assessing your progress is an important part of studying. While self-studying, read the notes, do the worksheets, and later check your answer with the answer key provided to evaluate your understanding of the subject/topic.
5. And last but not the least, relax. Self-study requires that you take well-placed breaks and don't stress. Taking regular breaks from study is important to re-energize.

Stay safe and stay healthy!

Warm regards
